S, Cotman, David Cox, Peter De Wint The few oil paintings then which Cotman was able to produce, with little leisure and practically no commissions - nor did he work at oils except during certain portions of his career - are swamped for the public, in the far greater mass of work attributed to him on little or no grounds; and, strangely enough, it is not usually because of likeness to his style that a picture is dubbed with his name, for in 1 many cases there is no hint of likeness, but Simply because it is striking and the authorship uncertain. Any forcible sea-piece has a chance of getting christened his in time. I With the drawings which he produced in infinitely greater number the case is different, though the result is much the same. As in life he was forced to be a drawing-master, SO after death it is the product of his drudgery, not of his delight, which is usually (made to represent him. During the latter part of his life he pro duced many drawings which, with all their accomplishment, are hardly worthy of him. Yet it is these which one usually sees exhibited, at least in London. Numbers of his earlier and finer drawings have, I imagine, perished through long service as copies for his pupils. But there is happily another side to this picture. If people in general have been for the most part far too careless in giving Cotman s name to pictures, still there have been one or two art lovers and collectors who have always valued him at his proper worth, who have been jealous of...
