Harvard Business Review Press, United States, 1997. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. With this book, managers have a new strategic framework for making explicit connections between what they know about their customers and how they can leverage that information to create value. Do you know the value of your customer relationship portfolio and manage it to maximize firm value? How can connecting technology be used to collaborate with or learn from your buyers? What are the major determinants of supplier value to your customers? Are they the same across all customers? Are there opportunities to redesign your product to capture value from another part of the value...
