Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from What Causes Fatigue?: An Address In modern industry there is no question of more importance, so far as human activity is concerned, than that of bodily fatigue. A review of the causes of fatigue and of remedial measures looking to prevention of over-tiredness is therefore appropriate at this meeting. It needs no scientist to tell us that the proper use of muscle increases its power for work, that proper exercise increases strength. As Josephine Goldmark has well said: Work itself is of the essence of life; without it, man s physical as well as his moral nature decays. Regular continuous labor and exertion is as necessary for the worker s health as it is for subsistence. Some Physiological Facts. To understand fatigue, and the various factors of its causation, we must understand certain physiological facts. In the living body there is constant change. Constantly there is a building up process; constantly there is a breaking down and wasting process. Even though there be but little bodily movement or exertion, still the glands are secreting, still there is production of heat. The chemical changes that take place are known as metabolism, the building up process being called anabolism, and the breaking down process catabolism. In the muscles particularly such chemical changes are constantly taking place. These changes take place more rapidly when the muscles are in action, that is, when the muscles contract. Every exertion and muscular contraction causes the expenditure of energy. Every muscle contains in itself latent energy in fuel to be converted into mechanical energy and heat.
